

MORNING APPEAL.

THURSDAY.....NOVEMBER 29, 1877

THE CONFEDERATE TRIUMPH.

Very little can be said which can satisfy alarm, chagrin and indignation. Republicanism consistent and loyal to itself has been stigmatized in the house of its friends and is nicknamed Radicalism; in the house of its enemies it is known as carpet-bagging and skallywagism. In the North the party which saved the Union has been divided against itself. It is demonstrated that blows will rouse the North to action. Peace, baited with commerce, manufactures and political spoils, divided it into contemptible factions. The South stands solid. It has availed itself of manumission to augment its numerical strength in Congress. It has availed itself of the clemency of Reconstruction to fill the Senate Chamber and House of Representatives with rebel soldiery. It has availed itself of the North's cowardly repudiation of the carpet-baggers to make the latter its allies. The Confederacy is triumphant. The North is at the mercy of a President who is poisoned with the virus of State Rights, who is snatched by a corrupt treaty, and who is a malignant foe of Republicanism at the North and a traitor to the disputants of Confederate right of rule at the South. The Republic is at the mercy of a political combination holding the majority in both houses of Congress, made up of the unrepentant adherents of the Lost Cause. The Union is preserved—on a Confederate basis. Reconstruction is a farce; for Jeff Davis is vindicated. The black man is again within the iron gripe of his old master. The Democracy, consistent and loyal to its own ends dominates the government. Now let them dismiss Hayes the Traitor and seat Tilden in the White House and the revolution, already accomplished, will be fitly completed.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT OF THE "MORNING APPEAL."

Washington November 21, 1877.

EDITOR APPEAL: The motion made yesterday by Senator Thurman to discharge the Committee of Privileges and Elections from the further consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler, of South Carolina, has opened a debate which is likely to run during the called session, unless some compromise shall be effected.

Many Senators and Members are anxious to spend the Thanksgiving day at home, and their desire may bring about an adjournment before this reaches you. In that event the South Carolina case will rear its head at the next session, and debate will go on ad infinitum, as a Maryland State Senator once said, "to a certain extent." All things in politics must have an end, and hence people are encouraged to believe that South Carolina and Louisiana political contests will not be exceptions.

At this writing Thurman, Mitchell, Hill, and Wadleigh have entered the arena, and so far as the facts are concerned the Republicans seem to have the advantage. Thurman, who is a shrewd as well as a learned man, made a mistake in claiming his resolution as a question of high privilege—a claim that was speedily put down by Senator Hoar, who showed that the "high privilege" terminated when the case was sent by the Senate to its Committee. If any question should arise as to the ability of the Republican Senators to take out the debate until March 1879, it can easily be settled by reference to the voluminous reports on South Carolina affairs which may be embodied in their speeches, and at their demand read from the Secretary's desk. Such a course might disgust the reader as well as the listener; but bad diseases require strong treatment, and it may be that a party which should give away power now, because at some future time it is to be wrested from it, would be held to strict accountability.

It is somewhere related in the classics that a certain king, who had the prospect of a splendid vintage, was told by a slave whom he had maltreated, that he would never live to enjoy it. When the wine was ready, the king, in order to confute the slave, had him brought forth, and taking a goblet in his hand poured into it a libation, and reminded the slave of his prediction. The latter thereupon said for the first time what you may have heard since, to wit: There is many a slip between the cup and the lip. Just at that moment a courier arrived informing the king that a very wild boar had broken into his vineyard and was committing great devastation, whereupon the king threw down the goblet, seized his spear and sallied out to attack a boar which killed a king who never tasted his vintage—thus verifying the slave's prediction. "The Democrats come up smiling every day, and seem confident that March 1879 will dawn upon them as victors; but what with the policy of my friend Hayes, the interlocutory questions of finance, tariff, silver, appointments, and the devil knows what, they may as well keep in mind the experience of the king who is revived, as Wetmore of the Alta is fond of saying, "in this correspondence." PALTA.

P. S. (By the Editor.) We can see where the aforesaid boar plays a part in the proceedings treated of by our correspondent; but the slip between Patterson's cup and Thurman's lip is not (in the light of the latest dispatches) so evident to the eye of the anxious carpet-bagger and the trusting skallywag.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Further than to make mention of a holiday whose recurrence is as intimate an event in the knowledge of everybody as that of the Fourth of July or any other American feast, the MORNING APPEAL does not deem it necessary or tasteful to go. Let the good men of the religious ministry do the timely preaching; and let the people assemble and give ear. Words are for those who have thanks to give; but the voice of Charity speaks with more emphasis and to a better purpose than can find expression in mere phrase of lip or line. While we remember the poor, let the poor have occasion to remember us—in gratitude. THE APPEAL sends out its greetings of cheer, of good neighborhood, of wishes for plenty and peace, for comfort, for amelioration, and for prosperity.

A THANKSGIVING.

By Lucy Larcom.

For the wealth of pathless forests,
Whereon no axe may fall;
For the winds that haunt the branches;
The young bird's timid call;
For the red leaves dropped like rubies
Upon the dark green sod;
For the waving of the forests,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the sound of waters gushing
In bubbling beads of light;
For the fleets of snow-white lilies
Firmly anchored out of sight;
For the reeds among the eddies;
The crystal on the eel;
For the flowing of the rivers,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the rosebud's break of beauty
Along the toiler's way;
For the violet's eye that opens
To bless the new-born day;
For the bare twigs that in summer
Bloom like the prophet's rod;
For the blossoming of flowers,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the lifting up of mountains,
In brightness and in dread;
For the peaks where snow and sunshine
Alone have dared to tread;
For the dark of silent gorges,
Whence mighty cedars nod;
For the majesty of mountains,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the splendor of the sunsets,
Vast mirrored on the sea;
For the gold-fringed clouds that curtain
Heaven's inner mystery;
For the molten bars of twilight,
Where thought leans, glad, yet awed;
For the glory of the sunsets,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the earth, and all its beauty;
The sky and all its light;
For the dim and soothing shadows,
That rest the dazzled sight;
For unfading fields and prairies,
Where sense in vain has trod;
For the world's exhaustless beauty,
I thank Thee, O my God!

A PLAYFUL ELEPHANT.

The San Francisco Post of Monday evening relates the following concerning a baby elephant in that city: One of the principal realistic effects in the Kralley's production of "Around the World" at the Bush Street Theater is the "Baby" elephant which is said to have at one time figured in Forepangh's circus. The organ of destructiveness is highly "developed" in the "Baby," and threatens to draw largely on manager Locke's treasury, in making good damages. "Baby" was at first confined to a stable close to the theater in company with an ass. Between the ass and the elephant a warm friendship sprang up, and for some days the two were as happy as clams at high water. About a week ago, however, the proprietor of the stable—an Irishman—waited on Locke and told him that he wanted "the elephant," with the accent on the last syllable out of that. "The baste has destroyed three and a half tons of my best hay," he continued "and I won't stand him another minute." It appears that "Baby's" chief amusement was to untie bundles of hay and scattering it all over the stable, treading it well into the ground. In consequence of this complaint the Baby was removed to a store underneath the theater, in which there were three buggies and the meter and gas pipes. The "Baby" absolutely cried on parting with his friend, the donkey, and the tears coursing down his cheeks, while the latter set up a most doleful braying, which continued for hours. No sooner had the doors been locked upon the "Baby" than grief gave away to passion and he went for everything in sight. In a few minutes he had the tops off the three buggies and smashed them to atoms under his ponderous feet. He then wound his trunk around the gas meter, took it down, laid it on the ground, and after the manner of babies in general, broke it open to see what was inside of it—in fact, he wanted to see "how the wheels go round." He also chewed up a few yards of gas pipe before he rested from his labors. It was a two-days' job for the plumber to repair damages, but the buggies are said to be beyond repair. "Baby" has not confined his playful gambols to the stable. He is evidently a lover of the fair sex, for one evening last week he insisted on embracing with his trunk, the prima ballerina after she had executed a more than usually brilliant pas. The lady fled in affright, and Baby was led off captive to his prison, where there are no buggies and the gas fixtures are out of reach.

SUDDEN DEATH.—The Reno Gazette of Tuesday evening notes the death of a young man as follows: Yesterday afternoon, while Don Tillow, a locomotive engineer who resided in Wadsworth while talking to his wife at their home, suddenly fell to the floor and died in twenty minutes thereafter. His death probably resulted from apoplexy or heart disease. Tillow ran an engine between Wadsworth and Winnemucca, and was a young, hearty, strong man. He will be buried to-morrow afternoon in the Masonic burying ground of this place. He had taken as high as the 31st degree in Masonry.

THE CRISIS IN THE SENATE.

Washington, Nov. 28.—Immediately after the reading of the journal in the Senate, Wadleigh, Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, moved to proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported by that committee for the admission of Kellogg as Senator from Louisiana.

Thurman objected and read the eighth rule, which provides that no bill, report of committee, or other subject upon the calendar, shall be proceeded with in the morning hour, unless by unanimous consent.

A long discussion in regard to the rules ensued, which was participated in by Edmunds, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace and others. Finally the Vice President decided that the subject was a question of the highest privilege, and could be considered in the morning hour, notwithstanding objections.

Thurman appealed for the decision, and the yeas and nays being called the decision was sustained, yeas 29, nays 23. Patterson voted with the Democrats in the negative, and Canover with the Republicans in the affirmative. Davis of Illinois did not vote.

The question then being, will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, declaring Kellogg entitled to a seat as Senator from Louisiana, the vote resulted, yeas 29, nays 23.

The Vice President voted in the affirmative, and the resolution was taken up. Canover voted with the Republicans in the affirmative, and Patterson and Davis, of Illinois with the Democrats in the negative.

After it was decided to take up the Kellogg case, another long debate sprang up between Wadleigh, Hill, Hoar, Saulsbury and McMillan, all members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as to the status of the case of Eustis, claiming the seat from Louisiana for the term ending March 4th, 1879, the Democrats arguing that his case might have been reported before this time, and the Republicans claiming that it would have been already reported, had not the committee been prevented from meeting yesterday by the continuous session of the Senate.

Thurman then moved to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved," and inserting "that M. C. Butler be now sworn in as Senator from South Carolina."

Edmunds said he did not want time used unnecessarily, and therefore suggested that a vote be taken on the admission of Butler on Saturday at 1 o'clock. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The vote on Thurman's amendment to swear in Butler resulted in yeas 31, nays 31, Davis of Illinois and Patterson voting with the Democrats in the affirmative, and Canover with the Republicans in the negative. The Vice-President gave the deciding vote and declared the amendment lost.

Thurman arose to a point of order and challenged the right of the Vice President to vote on this matter, as the question "was one affecting the organization of the Senate and not a question where the provision of the Constitution that the Vice President had a deciding vote in the case of a tie applied. Debate ensued.

As the debate progressed on Thurman's objections, some Democrats indicated that they differed with Thurman, and he withdrew his objection.

Mr. Wheeler said he believed he had a right to vote on all questions when the Senate is equally divided, and he intended to exercise his right at his discretion.

Charles Sumner was a dull man among women. Story says of him: "Of all the men I ever knew at his age, he was the least susceptible to the charms of women. Men he liked best, and with them he preferred to talk.
